Sand Goannas · Questions 1–6

Sand Goannas

Sand goannas live in dry woodland and dunes. They are well suited to this place, but they still need food, water and shelter to survive. Conditions can change across the day and through the seasons, so safe resting places are important.

Features such as long claws and a forked tongue help them dig and detect nearby food. These adaptations make everyday tasks easier and can also help them avoid danger. Young organisms survive best when their surroundings provide suitable food or nutrients and shelter.

They obtain what they need from insects, eggs and small animals. As they live and grow in their habitat, they also become part of a larger food web that connects plants and animals. Changes to one part of this web can affect many other living things.

The Robot in the Recycling Bin · Questions 13–18

The Robot in the Recycling Bin

Lila was helping near the science room when Lila noticed a palm-sized robot. It looked ordinary at first, but one detail seemed new. Lila looked around for clues before touching or moving anything.

As Lila examined it more closely, it sorted objects but refused every metal lid. Lila hesitated. The discovery was exciting, yet it might belong to someone else or be too delicate to handle alone. A hurried choice could damage both the object and the clues around it.

Instead of rushing ahead, Lila tested the lids and found one was magnetic. Each new clue matched something already visible in the science room, so the search became careful rather than wild. Lila paused after every step to record what had changed.

At last, the robot used it as the missing wheel for its cart. Lila wrote a short note explaining where the object had been found and what had happened. The note included the order of the clues so another person could check the discovery.

By the end of the afternoon, the discovery had become part of the place's story. Lila was proud, not because the object was valuable, but because patience and careful thinking had protected it. The adults agreed that the object should stay with a clear label for future visitors.
