Flying Fox Camps · Questions 1–6

Flying Fox Camps

Flying foxes live in tall trees near food sources. They are well suited to this place, but they still need food, water and shelter to survive. Conditions can change across the day and through the seasons, so safe resting places are important.

Features such as wide wings and a strong sense of smell help them find blossoms at night. These adaptations make everyday tasks easier and can also help them avoid danger. Young organisms survive best when their surroundings provide suitable food or nutrients and shelter.

They obtain what they need from nectar, pollen and fruit. As they live and grow in their habitat, they also become part of a larger food web that connects plants and animals. Changes to one part of this web can affect many other living things.

One challenge is heatwaves. People can help by protecting shaded camp trees, observing living things responsibly and leaving natural shelters undisturbed. Small, repeated actions can protect the habitat without preventing people from learning about it.

The Garden Gate at Midnight · Questions 13–18

The Garden Gate at Midnight

Maya was helping near the school garden when Maya noticed a copper gate. It looked ordinary at first, but one detail seemed new. Maya looked around for clues before touching or moving anything.

As Maya examined it more closely, it opened only when the moonlight crossed its centre. Maya hesitated. The discovery was exciting, yet it might belong to someone else or be too delicate to handle alone. A hurried choice could damage both the object and the clues around it.

Instead of rushing ahead, Maya waited with an adult and observed the shadow pattern. Each new clue matched something already visible in the school garden, so the search became careful rather than wild. Maya paused after every step to record what had changed.

At last, the gate revealed a night-flowering plant in bloom. Maya wrote a short note explaining where the object had been found and what had happened. The note included the order of the clues so another person could check the discovery.

By the end of the afternoon, the discovery had become part of the place's story. Maya was proud, not because the object was valuable, but because patience and careful thinking had protected it. The adults agreed that the object should stay with a clear label for future visitors.
